Sure, but what if everyone involved in the decision-making process whether or not to investigate (and later arrest, charge, etc.) IS IN ON IT?

Yeah, nothing happens. And look what we're seeing - nothing happening to any of these election fraud criminals. What does that tell you?

That can be a new .WIN site! They already have consumeproduct.win which is the old banned /r/consumeproduct from reddit.

Sadly, consumeproduct.win isn't nearly as good as the old Reddit version.... yet. I hope it improves. 95% reduction in awesome mocking posts about Funko pops and idiots with walls full of Star Wars figures they paid a total of $185,000 for (including expensive "rare" ones, as if anyone gives a shit how many there are out there) all of which cost the mass-producing corporation a total of probably $40 in materials and labor to actually make. So now the guy has to work until he dies of old age due to having no retirement savings, in exchange for a wall of useless nerd plastic bullshit. LOL.

Almost no posts like that anymore, just other stuff that kinda sucks. I really miss the good content!

An old friend of mine recently passed away so some mutual friends cleared out his house and brought back all of his belongings (to sell for his funeral expenses.)

As far as I could tell, there was little in the way of what we would consider normal average housewares. The bulk of it was Star Wars/sci-fi memorabilia/products, much of it still in the wrapper. That guy spent tens of thousands of dollars paying retail on toys etc that he never opened, books he never got around to, DVDs he never watched. No porn, all of it was comic-culture/sci-fi stuff. This guy's case is a sad marker of the times we live in: he was extremely intelligent, had a prestigious job, but never married or even had a girlfriend. It was very weird selling off all that stuff for pennies on the dollar, knowing its importance to him (yet with little real-world value, even in original unopened packaging.)

permalink parent save report block reply.

= Phil\_DeGraves 2 points 8 days ago +2 / -0

I can certainly understand never getting married, and I can also understand not having a girlfriend. Relationships aren't for everyone and there are definite upsides to avoiding them if one doesn't want or need them. What I can't understand is blowing tons of money on useless plastic pop culture shit (especially if you never open it!) instead of investing it or finding a worthy, productive use for the money.

But then, I'm not a "collector" so I simply can't grasp or relate to their mindset. For that I'm thankful, because it seems pretty messed up and illogical to me.

permalink parent save report block reply.

= independentlybystander 1 point 8 days ago +1 / -0

Not only am I not a "collector," I am not a Star Wars fan and have been quite anti-Hollywood "product" in general for many years now. I understand the concept of "life, liberty, and pursuit of happiness" but do not understand the "collector"-nerd mindset that drives someone to spend tens of thousands of dollars on toys/books/DVDs with no intent to open the packages. Granted, I don't consider most of those Hollywood "products" to be worth watching/reading: it's mostly commie propaganda and preachy "woke" remakes. But he had all manner of esoteric sci-fi trivia stuff memorized, the way a really deep sports fan knows statistics from bygone seasons. (He would have dominated on a TV game-show.) I felt it was an incredible amount of thought to put into something completely fictional, but whatever.

As I said, this guy was probably the most intelligent person I personally knew as far as IQ. He had a great understanding of higher math, science, and history, with multiple masters' degrees. Never touched drugs or alcohol. In almost every way, he was a very down-to-earth logical-thinking person... except for the mind-boggling amount of money he spent on all those un-opened sci-fi trinkets etc. What is really crazy: he could have found a girl just as much into that stuff as he was, now that the internet allows for that sort of vetting. He wasn't a MGTOW kind of guy (not that he realized, anyway.) More importantly, he could have used that money for better insurance and healthcare instead of dying young (with a house full of unopened Star Wars toys.)

They'll make their final case in another damning presentation in front of congress. The media will ignore the substance and evidence revealed in the presentation and repeat their worn-out, dismissive rhetoric using a combination of buzz-words like "unhinged", "deranged", "attempt to overturn the election", "false conspiracies", "baseless allegations", "no evidence" and so on. Most of congress will ignore what they saw once again and vote the way their deep-state paymasters and blackmailers tell them to. Congress will vote to certify Biden. At that point, nobody knows what will happen.

Most likely, Pence will attempt a filibuster until he is forced to certify. Trump will need to make an actual power play during this time, or have a "crossing the Rubicon" move up his sleeve where everyone decides to ignore the rules and we have an old-fashioned power-struggle instead. In any scenario where Trump continues to hold office, that's likely what it would take because evidence and truth is meaningless. You can't argue with the corrupt, that's why congress always votes party lines. Arguments are meaningless, only loyalty matters. Does Trump have loyalty among those who can win a Washington power struggle? Without military involvement or a right-wing populist uprising, the odds are not great. Either way, DC is militantly left wing meaning Trump and republicans are in enemy territory already. He needs a large turnout to even the odds if he does have anything planned.

According to the rules, Pence can't select alternate electors without a majority vote in congress. That will never happen because truth and evidence doesn't matter at this point, only loyalty matters and most of congress is controlled by their paymasters, the media and the deep state. If he does attempt to stop the certification, it would likely be through a filibuster until either congress forces him to vote, ignores him, or Trump can execute an old-fashioned power struggle. Unless Trump knows something I don't, which may be the case, if they went that route it would need to involve actually arresting people, meaning he would need a monopoly on force. Are people loyal to him in the DOD and SS willing to fight over this? Whatever happens, it will be for the history books, I just hope we are the ones to write them.
